

Student Learns Lessons about Denbigh School's Top Job

"An eye-opener" and "an amazing experience" were just some of the reactions from a Denbigh student after he won the opportunity to be 'Headteacher for the Day'.

Luke Murphy secured the first prize of taking over as Head in a draw at the School's Bazaar, which is organised annually to raise money for various charities, including Willen Hospice and Young Carers MK this year.

Luke's varied full day's timetable consisted of presenting certificates to students involved in a magistrate court competition, a site and maintenance inspection and collecting charitable donations during a non-school uniform day.

Denbigh School's Headteacher, Andy Squires said:

"This is the first time we have run this initiative and it was a resounding success. Luke finished his day with a greater understanding of the responsibilities of a Headteacher in a busy and successful secondary school.

"He made some interesting and useful suggestions about how he would change the role and I hope that the experience inspires Luke to consider a similar diverse and positively challenging career himself in the future."
